Overview of Agency

Department of State Health Services
Public and Population Health Framework

Purpose: To provide a clear and consistent framework that describes the roles DS HS plays in the public and population health system of Texas with the objective of improving the health of Texans and strengthening DS HS operations.

DS HS has two foundational roles in Texas public health:
1. State leader for the public and population health system and
2. Provider of state public health programs and services.

Public Health is the science and professional discipline of preventing, detecting, and responding to specific medical risks and conditions. Public Health looks at issues, policies, and outcomes, and is concerned with broad disease categories across all communities. Population Health focuses on health outcomes of a group of individuals or communities, and measures the incidence and prevalence of health conditions and disease within a defined population.

State Leader for the Public and Population Health System
Vision: A Healthy Texas

Public and Population Health Leaders
- Establish system-wide objectives
  - Improve, integrate and strengthen the Texas public health system including state, local and regional public health activities
  - Develop Public Health Priorities for the state, including public and population health strategies to address health improvements, gaps, and disparities.

Public Health Science & Data Source
- Provide public health expertise and consultation to the larger system.
- Create or advance methods for applying science and data in establishing health priorities, program development and measuring program effectiveness.
- Proactively communicate public health information to the larger system.
- Produce, advance and disseminate public health research, best practices, and innovation.
- Empower individual community and system health through the collection, analysis, and dissemination of high quality and actionable health and safety data.

Public Health Conveners/Partner
- Continually work to identify partnership opportunities
- Convene key groups to discuss, strategize and implement methods of addressing public health priorities and emerging issues
- Collaborate with experts from around the state to inform public health planning
